MISSOURI STATE NEWS.

Points on Hog Cholera.

Dr. D. F. Luckey, state veterinarian, has just issued a report on hog cholera.

"At present, all the advice that can be given is to burn the bodies of the cholera hogs." After advising against the use of hog cholera vaccine, Dr. Luckey continues: "Use a little common sense about bringing the cholera to your place. If you really think you need the cholera among your hogs, take a little time and go to your neighbors who have it, walk around among the sick hogs, go back home and tramp around your own hogs, and you can go to bed that night feeling reasonably sure that a few days your hogs will have the cholera. If this should fail, and it seldom does, wait till you hear of a neighbor who lives up the creek from you losing some hogs with cholera and throwing their carcasses in or near the creek. Then, as soon as the germs have time to wash down by your place, get all your hogs together and drive them to the creek for a drink. If the weather is warm the hogs will generally go to the creek without being driven, thereby saving their owner the great deal of worry and exertion. If this fails, try to get a hog from a neighbor who has the cholera, and keep it in a place to get some dirt over the country at night. If you will let him alone long enough he is sure to find somewhere a place of hog that had died about a year before with hog cholera. Four neighbors a piece buried that had died inches deep, and the dog, for about six feet, of any other pasture, scratches it up.
